

Mock Election

Although Tuesday is Election Day, Friday there will be a mock election at BYU. Look for details in Thursday's Daily Universe.

Consumer spending boosts economy

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Consumer spending powered the economy to a better-than-expected 2.7 percent growth rate in the July-September quarter, the government said today in the last major economic report before Election Day.

The report showed that consumer spending rose seasonally and inflation-adjusted growth in the gross domestic product, while far less than past recovery periods, was nearly double what analysts had predicted.

President Bush, playing catch-up with Democrat Bill Clinton, immediately hailed the number as evidence of a turnaround, but private economists weren't convinced, with some going so far as to contend that the administration "cooked the numbers" to come up with the positive figures. "I think they cooked the books," said economist Michael K. Evans, a Washington-based consultant who favors the Republican. "This ... sounds like a dirty tricks department."

However, the Commerce Department's top economist, Assistant Secretary J. Antonio Villamil,

Expert views Columbus' experience positive

During this 500th-year celebration of Columbus' voyage to the Americas, it is dangerous to judge Columbus for his actions by modern-day standards, said Dr. Helen Nader, a historian of Renaissance Spain and expert on Columbus at a Forum Assembly Tuesday. She advised people to instead look at the historical context of Columbus' actions.

On his second voyage to what he called Asia, Columbus took 28 natives as war captives, she said.

Columbus made a fateful decision to send five hundred native women and children to be sold on the Seville slave market. "There is no doubt about it," Nader said.

She also said no doubt Columbus was responsible for his actions, Nader said. Columbus was stripped of his titles, and his second voyage to what he called Asia, Columbus took 28 natives as war captives, she said.

Growth rate spurt boosts Bush's 'ailing' campaign

Associated Press

President Bush seized on news of stronger-than-expected economic growth Tuesday as a welcome tonic for his ailing campaign.

Bill Clinton sped through the South, telling supporters who seemed ready to begin celebrating, "One more week."

The third man in the race, independent candidate Ross Perot, stayed out of sight after two days of appearances in which he accused the Republicans of plotting "dirty tricks" against him and his family.

"It's crazy," Bush said of Perot's allegation that Republicans were planning to disrupt his daughter's wedding. "A little bizarre," he said of Perot's spending tens of millions of dollars on campaign ads.

Clinton was glad to take the high road, denouncing "all this name-calling and stuff."

The government reported that economic growth jumped to an annual rate of 2.7 percent in the quarter ending Sept. 30.

The growth surprised most private forecasters and was nearly double the weak 1.5 percent rate in the April-June quarter.

"It's going to be very hard for the nay-sayers and the pessimists, who can only win by convincing people how bad things are, to refute the fact that this is very encouraging for America," the president said. "If you think I'm happy, you're right," Bush said.

said the bulk of the third quarter growth came from consumer spending, an area for which the department has hard data, rather than from areas such as trade, inventories and construction, which are partially estimated.

"This is based on solid evidence ... not on our assumptions. ... We go by the book and we call it like we see it," he said.

Even economists who stopped short of questioning the integrity of the statistics said they may simply represent a continuation of the stop-and-go pattern that has characterized the economy since the start of the recession in July 1990.

"This cannot be taken as a sign that the economy is all of a sudden snapping out of the doldrums," said Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch in New York.

Although the administration touted consumer spending for building up the economy, another report issued Tuesday from the Conference Board, a private organization in New York, said American consumers' confidence in the economy declined in October for the fourth consecutive month to the lowest level in eight months.

The latest quarter marked the fourth best gross domestic product showing of George Bush's presidency, but still left his administration with paltry average annual growth of just 0.8 percent.

To economists, that marks an important milestone: the end of the recovery and the start of a new expansion.

Utah Senatorial candidates, Wayne Owens and Bob Bennett, debate in the KBYU studio Tuesday night. They discussed negative advertising and the issue of change.

Bennett, Owens spar over ads, party gridlock in KBYU debate

By JOSHUA R. GRAHAM
Universe Staff Writer

The issue of "change" took on a new twist Tuesday night during a KBYU debate between U.S. Senate candidates Bob Bennett and Wayne Owens.

Bennett, the Republican, said he actually "does not intend to change the approach to working with Congress" retiring Republican Senator Jake Garn has had. He intends to change Congress just by his being there. "There is only one prescription for change in Congress and that's more Republicans," Bennett said. Bennett argued that Congress suffers from corruption, the result of having been "led by Democrats longer than Cuba has been led by Fidel Castro."

Bennett said skills like "knowing when to push and when not to push" were more important to success than party affiliation. In contrast, Owens pointed out that politics in Washington is a predominantly Democratic affair, especially with a likely Bill Clinton win in the presidential race. Owens insisted his experience would be vital to Utah interests.

"I've never run against the federal government," Owens said, "and I've learned how to make Washington work for Utah. I hope to have the opportunity to do it again."

Bennett also complained about negative Owens campaign ads and said the Republican senatorial primary was an example of a clean campaign. "Joe (Cannon) and I were able to get through the primary without this kind of negativity because neither of us were willing to take the first shot," he said.

Owens said his ads were not negative, referring specifically to advertisements concerning Bennett's involvement in the Watergate scandal which appeared in Salt Lake City newspapers Monday.

Bennett admitted he made mistakes, such as continuing to employ one of the Watergate burglars even after learning of his involvement. But he challenged Owens' right to criticize him, saying that while things may seem clear-cut in hindsight, it's often hard to know what to do in the middle of a situation.

Owens sat on the House Judiciary Committee that indicted President Nixon.

Owens tries for 'Truman' style

By JOSHUA R. GRAHAM
Universe Staff Writer

Democrat Wayne Owens has had a long history in politics, fighting for a "Truman" style for a seat in the Senate.

Although he has enjoyed serving in the U.S. House of Representatives, Owens said he feels a U.S. Senate seat would be "the ultimate" for him.

In 1974, he ran against Jake Garn (who is now in the same LDS ward as Owens) for the Senate seat vacated by Wallace Bennett (Bob Bennett's father).

He said this time around he had no intention of running, unless there wasn't another satisfactory Democratic candidate.

He said this time around he had no intention of running, unless there wasn't another satisfactory Democratic candidate.

WAYNE OWENS

"I couldn't find anyone that I thought would be elected. There was nobody else around that could put together a winning campaign," Owens said.

If he wins, the Senate will provide Owens with greater influence in Congress. "The real problems in the '90s and into the 21st century are going to be solved in the U.S. Senate," Owens said.

Owens does not feel he can identify with any particular historical politician because of an evolution in political thinking.

"I want social problems solved, but I've come to the reluctant conclusion that we can't do much more about the social problems until we have solved the economic and fiscal ones," he said.

Owens said warm air inversions along the Wasatch Front are a major problem related to health, the environment and economics. "The biggest problem in northern Utah is clean air," he said.

The biggest conflict between the environment and economics in Utah, Owens said, results from cars and the pollution they create. As a result, Owens has introduced legislation that would require all cars sold in the U.S. after the year 2003 to have pollution-free motors (such as those using natural gas).

When asked what the main environmental problem for the whole state is now, Owens said waste dumps for radioactive waste. He quickly added, "It isn't the clean air and the health and the transportation issues that I think really predominate. It's the idea of Utah becoming everybody's waste dump — just look at the waste incinerators out at Tooele. The nation

SAC questions flaws of BYUSA 'selections'

By BRIAN KAGEL
Senior Reporter

When a student leadership organization is divided into different parts, each with its own leader, working together can be difficult. In looking for solutions to inherent problems, the Student Advisory Council is evaluating the process used to "select" BYUSA presidents.

According to the current system, interested students from the general student body are encouraged to submit an application and essay. These applicants are then screened by a nomination committee, and those considered appropriate are then asked to come back for a 20-minute interview.

Kylie Nielson, executive director of evaluations, said she believes the selection process is flawed for several reasons. "How can you judge someone's leadership potential (in) a 20-minute interview?" And secondly, "It is unfair that the candidates aren't told by what standards they are being judged. It's true, they do have the charter, but it is hard to extract the qualities they are looking for out of that," she said.

When asked about the selection process, President Rex E. Lee said there are two sides to it. On one hand, when you have someone who comes from the selection process, you are guaranteed someone who will work with the system. On the other hand, you lose student ownership, he said. President Lee said he feels student ownership is important, and maybe we should look at other options.

Jason Hall, BYUSA president, said he thinks the selection process works well. "I think it's important students know that the candidates are good, upstanding students," Hall said he "had no clue" as to the standard by which he was going to be judged, except for his "character and heart." He said he thinks the interview gives enough time to get an accurate image of the prospective candidate. "The questions are pointed and good."

Hall said the only complaint he has heard about the selection process is only a select few that "toe the line" can make it to the election. "I've watched the elections during the last three years, and I don't think that (complaint) holds water," Hall said Marty Hill and Trevor Rosenberg are examples of candidates that don't fit that description.

Nielson said she also believes there are problems with recognition of the candidates. She said it's not uncommon that the selected BYUSA president has prior Y-group leadership experience and/or EFY involvement. "We call it the 'freshman swing vote.' There are voting booths set-up at the freshman dorms, so it is only logical they would vote for the candidate they were familiar with," she said.

Hall admits that the freshman vote did help him get elected, but he said his various speaking engagements at freshman wards were the most help. Hall also said he never asked to speak, but was always asked.

SAC is currently doing a survey of approximately 300 students to see what the general opinion is. Based on the surveys, interviews with past candidates and presidents, and other research, SAC plans to evaluate the current process and make recommendations if necessary.

"We're looking at several options. We have yet to get all the results, but one possibility is not having an elected president. After all, having an elected president for a service organization seems silly. It's like having an elected president for an organization like the United Way," Nielson said.

Because of SAC and BYUSA's differing roles, some have wondered if a separation would be a good thing. SAC chair Steve Turley said BYUSA presidency oversees budgeting, and "since SAC's budget falls under that, we couldn't exist otherwise. Our annual budget is far less than what BYUSA spends on any dance, but we manage to make do."

Turley asks, "What do you think students care more about, getting their concerns resolved or having a dance?"

Some believe that BYUSA's budget is not only a little excessive, but also at times ill-used. "There are some officers who have five or six plaques thanking them for their service. Do we really need that if they are just volunteers?" Nielson asked.

One example frequently cited is the printing and distribution of T-shirts. "We get a T-shirt for every conference or activity imaginable. It is pretty ridiculous. For one conference last week, there were over 50 shirts left over. And the conference wasn't any big deal — it only lasted a day and a half," one officer said. At an estimated $4 per shirt, the total cost was approximately $600.

Hall said the shirts are printed to give the participants "something to remember from the conference." He also said not all shirts are given away, but some are paid for by conference fees. Hall said the shirts are ordered according to those who RSVP and not everyone always shows up.

Remiss roommates a major cause of unpaid phone bills

Editor's note: This article is the first of a two-part series on phone bills. The series will discuss the predicaments students find themselves in, what causes these circumstances, prevention and consequences.

By LARA MAYO

Winter semester ended and Julie had the phone taken out of her name and put into her roommate's name. Four months later she went to hook up the phone in her new apartment and the phone company informed her she could not have phone service until she paid a $75 bill she did not even know she had.

What happened? "The phone company said it was a late fee for a bill I already thought I had paid," said Julie Call, 20, a junior majoring in English from Apple Valley, Calif.

Every day there are BYU students facing the same kind of phone bill problems, Call did.

And it's not just BYU students that find themselves in a bind. "It happens everywhere," said Steve Linton, public policy manager for U.S. West Communications in Provo. "I wouldn't single out BYU as any worse than other college towns. It happens in any situation where there is a college."

"They (college students) are high on the list of who we lose money to," said Debbie Hall, a credit consultant for U.S. West Communications in Salt Lake City.

But she, like Linton, emphasized that U.S. West does not lose any more money to BYU students than any other university.

However, some companies are more concerned than others with the chance they take when they service students. "Tel America does not try to cater to students, mainly because of credit problems," said Chad Bauer, corporate marketing manager for Tel America in Salt Lake City. "There is more student delinquency than with normal residency."

About 5 to 10 percent of the students Tel America services will not pay their bills within 90 days and about 3 percent of those delinquent payers' bills will go on to a credit agency, Bauer said.

U.S. West, AT&T and Tel America do not have exact figures available for the amount of money they lose to students. "We do our billing through the local companies, so we don't know who doesn't pay," said Wanda Engstrom, account representative for AT&T in Dallas, Texas. But when students fail to pay their phone bills, "they (local phone companies) eat their portion and we eat ours," she said.

As for the Student Telephone Services on campus, "we don't have much of a problem," said Steve

Senator blasts Bush on Iraq arms deal

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Banking Committee accused the Bush administration Tuesday of "putting out false information" on U.S. export of advanced technology to Iraq before the Gulf War.

Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., also criticized the Justice Department for what he called a delay in investigating possible criminal wrongdoing by administration officials.

"It appears on the face of it that laws were broken; the people that did it have to be identified," said Riegle, who was the only committee member present.

"The delay cannot go on indefinitely here. If this Justice Department and attorney general don't do it, then another one will," he said.

Before they were submitted to Congress, documents pertaining to export licenses for Iraq were improperly altered by Commerce Department employees to disguise their military potential, the department's inspector general has found.

Riegle was bolstered in his assertions by testimony from several nuclear technology experts who disputed recent statements by President Bush and top administration officials that U.S. technology was not used in Iraq's nuclear weapons program.

Astronauts rock 'n' roll MTV viewers

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia's astronauts rocked and rolled around the world Tuesday, sharing their orbital musical selections with MTV viewers.

Oh yes, they also conducted more experiments.

Pilot Michael Baker celebrated his 39th birthday in orbit Tuesday. Mission Control marked the occasion by piping up the Beatles tune "Birthday" for the crew's wakeup call.

Commander James Wetherbee, a drummer in an astronaut rock band called Max Q, said in an interview with the music video cable TV network that playing the drums is "a pretty fun diversion from an otherwise dull and boring profession."

"But I tell you what, getting up in front of people and playing on stage, with my talent, really scares me," Wetherbee said.

Canadians defeat 'political elite'

MONTREAL — Canadians discovered a new unity Tuesday. East and west, French and English came together — not over constitutional reforms but in rejecting the path chosen by the country's political elite.

The results of Monday's referendum was a sharp rebuff to Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, provincial premiers and aboriginal leaders. Voters in French-speaking Quebec rejected the reform accord, but it also lost in five other provinces and one territory.

The constitutional changes would have recognized Quebec as a "distinct society," reformed the Senate and the House of Commons to give western states more representation, and recognized the rights of Indians and Inuit to govern themselves.

Canadians combined to vote the measure down 54.4 percent to 42.4 percent. Canada was left no closer to a consensus on dealing with the cultural and regional differences that have been straining the federation for years.

Scantily clad dancers jar LDS group

SAN DIEGO — A provocative performance by two scantily clad dancers drove a group of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints from the stage of an architectural awards ceremony.

During the Orchids & Onions ceremony on Saturday, one of the dancers removed her T-shirt, revealing lingerie, and draped the T-shirt over the head of City Councilmember Ron Roberts.

The dancers were on stage to help accept an award for the Midway Medical Building, a glass-and-neon building next door to a topless bar called Pacers. The women from the bar were invited on stage by Dr. Richard C. Richley, who was accepting the award as one of the partners who developed the project.

Also on stage at the time was a contingent to accept an award for the San Diego Temple. During the dancers' suggestive performance, the three Latter-day Saints left the stage.

The annual awards ceremony celebrates and deplores good and bad buildings, design and planning in San Diego County.

Bill Lewis, the architect who had just accepted the award for the temple he designed, said he and his colleagues left the stage because the dancers offended them.

Ireco operating legally before blast, office says

By JAMES L. AHLSTROM
Universe Staff Writer

Even though the Ireco explosives manufacturing plant, which blew up Sept. 28, didn't have a valid operating license, the Utah County Commissioner's Office concluded this week the license wouldn't have made a difference in the explosion.

"They were operating under proper ordinances and safety procedures," said Utah County Commissioner Gary Herbert. He said Ireco would have been given a license to operate at the plant that exploded had they requested one.

The Ireco plant did not receive a citation or any punitive measures for not having an operating license.

Ireco's explosives plant, located 10 miles outside of Lehi on the west shore of Utah Lake, exploded the morning of Sept. 28 after a gel-like substance overheated and then detonated. Three employees and a security guard were able to flee the site and thus escape injury from the explosion.

Mission languages translate to aid for local police

By JAMES L. AHLSTROM
Universe Staff Writer

Local police officers are using foreign-language speaking returned missionaries to overcome daily language barriers.

Sgt. Steve Clark of the Orem Police said once an Orem police officer, who went to Thailand on his mission, was needed to communicate with an Asian group. The officer couldn't remember the word for attention so he shouted "Behold" to get the group's attention, Clark said.

"They ended up speaking English anyway," Clark said.

He said the officer got their attention, though.

"We're lucky, because of all the people going on missions, we have a pretty diverse group who speak foreign languages," said Lt. Roger Winkler of the Salt Lake City Police Department.

Police Captain Daune Frazier said police officers who speak Spanish are the most frequently called upon to translate. He said police officers in Provo do not face situations which require a translator as often as other police stations in Utah.

The most recent event in Provo which required the use of a translator involved a Chinese-speaking landlord having a dispute with one of the tenants.

There are officers in Orem who speak Spanish, Laotian, Italian, American Sign Language and French, Clark said. Portuguese, Thai, Korean, Navajo, Greek, Cambodian and Vietnamese are also available to the officers by contacting the Orem 4th Circuit Court. The court would then contact individuals from a language list they have and dispatch someone to aid the officer.

Clark said they very rarely have to contact anyone outside of their own personnel.

Even in Salt Lake City, which has a broader ethnic population, police officials seldom look outside of their own personnel to overcome language barriers, Winkler said.

A dispatcher with the Salt Lake City Police Department agreed. "In the four years I have worked here (SLC police department), I have never had to call on anyone on our language list," he said.

Fourth District Court Judge Lynn Davis is the chairman of a language committee which submits recommendations to the Utah State Court Action Office. He said 80 to 90 percent of interpreter needs are for the Spanish language. Navajo, Samoan and various Asian languages are the next most common languages officers encounter, he said.

Students choreograph weekend dance concert

By ISABEL HUELVES
Universe Staff Writer

An original contemporary dance concert choreographed and produced entirely by four BYU dance majors is scheduled to be performed Thursday and Friday at 7:30 in the Dance Production Studio in the Steven L. Richards Building.

The concert, "Whisperings from the Third Eye," was created by BYU students who desire to express their talent and prove their capabilities, said Gary Hopkinson, dance department director.

"This is the first time that students have taken the whole program by themselves. They have done this on their own, but the department supports them," Hopkinson said.

Marcie Lamoreaux, a senior from American Fork; Belinda Cheng, a senior from Paradise, Calif.; Ronna Atkinson, a senior from Mission Viejo, Calif.; and Nanette Barker Dragen, a graduate student from Chico, Calif., have been preparing the choreography for the last two months.

"We're offering extremely unconventional dances," Cheng said.

One dance piece in the concert stars untrained dancers,

Lamoreaux said. She said it wasn't hard to teach untrained dancers because any person can dance if he or she is willing to take the risk and the time.

Approximately 30 students will participate in this program, which will be accompanied by contemporary music from the 19th and 20th centuries, Cheng said.

"I feel very excited. One of the dances that I choreographed comes from a series of dreams I had this summer," Cheng said.

"The title, 'Whisperings from the Third Eye,' revives our senses. It shows messages from the soul," Lamoreaux said.

"By 'Whisperings from the Third Eye,' we mean to have pure intuition, to move by the subconscious," Cheng said.

Cheng said it is important to do this concert independently, because it is a student production and a good experience for those who have helped bring it about.

Although a faculty advisor, Les Ditson, has been watching and giving advice to them, these students have taken care of the choreography, lighting and music of the whole showcase, Hopkinson said.

Tickets for the concert are free, and can be obtained at the dance ticket office at 165 RB.

thinks we are their toilet bowl, and it doesn't make any sense at all. It'll kill our appeal to outside people to move in here and bring their good businesses."

He accused the current legislature and governor of welcoming incineration and waste disposal as a growth development project. "That to me is self-defeating, very myopic and absolutely against Utah's interest," he said. "People won't want to live here if that's the case."

Owens said he feels that term limits for members of Congress are a bad idea because congressional staff members, who would remain in place while representatives came and went, "think they run the Congress anyway."

He suggests campaign reform that helps challengers compete against incumbents instead of term limits.

He said that although he and Bennett had been "warm friends over the years," they have had no reason to work together directly. He had hoped that Cannon would be opposing him instead of Bennett. "I wanted the second-best person there to get elected if I didn't," he said.

Owens said he initially supported Senator Paul Tsongas for president, but that he likes and supports Gov. Bill Clinton. However, Owens said he has not been very close to Clinton, having only met him once.

Owens has been walking around Utah, crisscrossing many crucial counties in rural Utah and Salt Lake like he did when he ran for the House in 1972, so that people have an opportunity to speak with him directly. This however, he laughingly points out, is both good and bad. "The fact that everybody knows me is my biggest strength and my biggest weakness," Owens said.

If he wins, he will "reintroduce the land transfer bill and get it through." If he loses? "I don't know, probably take 10 days off with my wife. Which I will do in either case."

Owens said the most rewarding experience of his life came serving as a mission president with 508 missionaries in the Montreal, Canada Mission from 1976-78. "The best part was just working with them, helping them adjust and reach their potential."

THE DAILY UNIVERSE

Brigham Young University Provo, Utah

OPINION

Polls pull for Clinton, will voters do same?

President Clinton. How's that sound? Try it again — President Clinton. Maybe it rolled off the tongue a little more smoothly that time. Chances are it didn't.

The daily CNN/Gallup poll shows Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton 11 points ahead of President George Bush and 22 points ahead of Independent Ross Perot. Some polls show Clinton leading by only five percentage points.

Clinton has dropped eight percentage points since last week, while Bush and Perot have stayed the same. But none of this will change the fact that unless a major miracle happens — Clinton will be this country's forty-second president.

Even if the other two candidates were to rise rapidly and sufficiently in the polls, the result would be an election decided in the House of Representatives — the same Democratic-controlled House that Bush has bemoaned for years. And Bill Clinton would be the president of the United States of America.

But is Bill Clinton that popular? Is he really American people's candidate of choice? Probably not. Especially not to those who refer to him as Slick Willy.

Clinton is not the candidate of choice in America. He's the lesser of three evils to most voters. One poll says 54 percent of Americans have at least some doubts about Clinton's character. But these same people also have no doubts that the economy is not as well as it could be, and the man held responsible for that is the incumbent, George Bush.

Ross Perot, had he not given up the race back in July, only to jump back in two months later, would be in contention now. That's not to say that his candidacy is not valid, but it is moot. Though he is gaining in the polls, he won't catch Clinton. Had he not dropped the ball the first time, Perot could easily be controlling the game at this time. And with the unfounded charges that Bush planned to investigate Perot's daughter and interrupt her marriage, Perot has further hurt his credibility.

Bush has not risen in the polls, he simply gains because of Clinton's losses. And that is representative of many American's views of Bush. What has he done since the Gulf War, and when was the last time he worried about the economy because he was concerned for America and not just for his job? Plainly put, Bush is seen as being complacent and any advances he makes are by default.

Therefore, Clinton has taken momentum and run with it. Americans are not, as a people, prone to look to the past to learn old lessons. They are not very willing to look to the future either, as witnessed by the low interest rates that encourage spending instead of saving. The thing of most concern to the average American is that the economy is in a recession, and they frankly don't care whether it's a global slowdown or not. It affects them, and that's enough to make them mad.

So Clinton will probably be president come January. And change, the key word for the Clinton/Gore campaign, will come. Whether America will like that change remains to be seen.

Unseen gambling costs

A sad fact is that untold thousands of people accept as truth its opposite. For example: Contrary to what you are told by those who don't want the truth known — prohibition helped reduce the crime rate.

The correct picture is best shown by Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower's statement at a Congressional hearing in June 1976. He stated:

"The rate of crime in this country, after declining from 1900 to about 1950, increased slightly during the 1950s, suddenly doubled in the 1960s and increased another 50 percent in the 1970s."

The decline in the crime rate started because the American people in the 1800s fought gambling-nurtured crime and corruption by banning lotteries in most of the state constitutions, and sanctions against gambling began to be enforced. Prohibition decreased alcohol's crime-promoting impact in six years so much that, when the whole Chicago area had a total of 130 murders in 1926-1927, our nation was shocked. In 1990, the city of Chicago alone had 851 murders despite having a population less than that in 1926-27.

The Prohibition era ended in 1933. By 1950, alcohol consumption and legal gambling throughout our nation were increasing to such an extent that, by 1957, they had pushed the violent crime rate to 117 incidents per 100,000 people and the property crime rate to 719 incidents per 100,000 people.

In 1990, our nation's violent crime rate was 732 incidents per 100,000 people and the property crime rate was 5,088 incidents per 100,000 people. The effective advertising of alcohol also encourages the use of other life-ruining drugs. Bingo, other types of lotteries and gambling in general train people to see success as the result of luck or fate. That idea causes its believers to see no reason to work or study because they think it will make no difference in what happens to a person. You might as well take what you can when you can.

The gambling industry and the alcoholic beverage industry have robbed us of our safety at home and in public. Giving in to them makes our problems worse. It's time for each of us to work at educating others and electing people who are determined to free our nation from those two scourges. My 21 years of researching the impact of legal gambling have made clear that as we multiply people's problems, the costs of government multiply and push taxes to new heights.

A major factor in the creation of our nation's economic problems is legal gambling. For example, look at what the lottery is doing to Virginia.

Virginia's voters were told a state lottery would be a financial boon to our state and they approved it in 1988. In fiscal 1990, lottery ticket sales were $474.8 million.

The General Fund of the Commonwealth received $156.5 million. That sounds great until problems pushed up state and local expenditures for public safety (police and fire protection and corrections) $497.8 million and for public welfare another $478.9 million. That forces our taxpayers into paying an additional $976.7 million in taxes each year.

That's only part of the way we are being robbed. Add to that $976.7 million the $474.8 million taken in a massive program training people to mismanage resources. That program is gilded by advertising to sell lottery tickets. Those three sums (public safety, public welfare and lottery ticket sales) add up to $1,451.5 million that should have been spent on beneficial things — such as houses, cars, appliances, etc. It could have been used to build 14,515 houses spending $100,000 on each. Think of the jobs that would have created for our forlorn construction industry.

Or that money could have purchased 145,155 cars at $10,000 each. There was also the possibility of selling 4,838,000 appliances at $300 each. That would have yielded sales taxes in the amount of $65.3 million. In other words, the taxpayers of Virginia are being short-changed by the lottery by at least $1,516.9 million each year. No wonder our per person state and local tax load went from $2,064 in 1987 to $3,065 in 1990.

Put your courage and talent to work to free our people from the chains of the scourge known as legal gambling.

READERS' FORUM

Exposed

To the editor:

Congratulations to Matthew Franck on his well-written, front-page article of Oct. 21, describing 3rd District candidate Richard Harrington's character. Unfortunately, the article exposes Harrington's character all too well. By pointing his finger at Bill Orton, calling him "part of the problem" in Congress, Harrington ignores the good that Orton has done for Utah. From what I've seen, Orton carefully considers the opinions of the district he represents, not ignoring them when he votes on an issue.

I find offensive Harrington's notion that this is "one of the nation's most conservative districts," and therefore ought to be represented by a conservative Republican. Who is he to tell us what our political philosophies are? Personally, I do not believe that most Utah Valley residents consider themselves "conservative Republicans."

On Nov. 3, I will vote for Bill Orton because I believe he is the only candidate who will vote in the best interest of his district, rather than in the best interest of his party.

Open dialogue

To the editor:

For the past few weeks, we have seen and heard nothing but negative comments about BYU's position concerning F-1 visa students' eligibility to receive the Lamanite Award. In past years, this award was primarily used to fund Latin American students. However, this year the policy changed; the emphasis has now reverted back to its original intent, which is to fund American Indians and American minorities. Though their concerns are valid, the methods they have employed to affect change are questionable.

In a recently published article, representatives from The Students for the Advancement of Latin America (SALA) were interviewed. SALA representatives expressed their desire to address the BYU administration's position. The substance of the article was both positive and constructive. In order to achieve a solution that is beneficial for all of those concerned, dialogue of this nature is necessary.

The leadership and maturity that was exhibited by those interviewed are to be commended. SALA's actions should be seen as a step in the right direction. Indeed, a club's willingness to reach a solution through peaceful and diplomatic channels should be the norm, not the exception.

Heavy burden

To the editor:

As for graduation in four years, if this is truly desired by the administration, there needs to be a complete re-evaluation of credit hours awarded for classes and a corresponding adjustment in graduation requirements. The four year graduation model calls for eight, 16-credit-hour semesters. However, it seems that the average student is taking less than 16 credits per semester, say about 13.5. Why? Not because the student body is lazy, but because 13.5 hours is the load they are able to work with. Sixteen hours, with the traditional "two hours out of class for every hour in class," indicates a student should spend at least 48 hours a week promoting his education. However, my own experience, as well as others', reveals that a typical three-hour course requires 12 to 14 hours (not nine) of work. Extrapolating this, a 16-hour schedule takes at least 64 hours (quite a jump from the assumed 48 hours). With work, Sunday worship, eating, sleeping and so forth, the number of hours in a week is inadequate. In order to compensate, less credit hours per semester are taken. Voila, the problem.

Encouraging attendance spring and summer terms is not a practical solution to the four-year graduation dilemma. Ever-

To the editor:

In the Oct. 21 paper there was a letter to the editor that said, "The only real issue in this election is abortion." Implied here is that as we try to decide who will be the best president for our country, we must ignore all the other issues and vote for the only candidate who is not pro-choice.

Abortion is an important issue, but there are other issues that are very important, too. Like the national debt. If we didn't have to spend $214 billion on interest payments every year we could use that money to solve some of the other problems in this country — education, health care and feeding the poor. Are we supposed to ignore all these issues? What about the environment, crime, drug use, political corruption, unemployment and trade? Are not all these important issues? If we ignore these issues and base our choice for president solely on the issue of abortion, we may end up electing someone who does our country a lot more harm than good. Or someone who will do nothing at all.

Remember also that the label "pro-choice" says nothing about a person's personal belief about abortion, other than he or she does not want to have the government decide who can and cannot have an abortion. For example, Ross Perot is personally opposed to elective abortion, but would leave the final decision up to the woman. I'm not arguing that pro-choice is right, but I can think of a lot worse candidates.

Please, as you choose your candidate for president, consider all the issues.

Double billing

To the editor:

I am concerned because there are two "slick" politicians named Bill parading around trying to be all things to all people. One is doing it to seek the office of the presidency, while the other is striving to maintain his seat as the congressional representative for Utah's 3rd District. The two "Slick Willies" that I speak of are Bill Clinton and Bill Orton.

My father is a third cousin of Gov. Clinton. To my family, Cousin Bill is an embarrassment. My family believes in hard work, America, morality and honesty. From his speeches and his actions it is obvious that Cousin Bill believes in something different. He believes that government should serve Americans as a second parent because they are incapable of governing their own lives. Cousin Bill, I think my parents have done an adequate job of raising me. Thank goodness they did not have your help.

My father grew up in Hope, Ark., and some of his immediate family still live there. Some of these people know the Clintons quite well, yet they cannot trust Cousin Bill enough to support his bid for the White House. Perhaps it is an issue of character. After all, if a person cannot be faithful to his family or his country, what can he be faithful to?

Now on to the second "Slick Willie." Bill Orton likes to call himself a conservative Democrat. That's fine, but when I look at Orton's voting record, conservative is not the word that comes to mind. Orton does not even like to tell people he is a Democrat. He says that he is a person who votes his conscience. Yet, when Richard Harrington refers to the Congressional Record, to expose Orton's liberal voting record, Orton whines and cries foul, just like Cousin Bill when asked about the draft. I have observed Orton's voting record and I believe that Richard Harrington has been very kind to him during this campaign.

Bill Orton receives more than 40 percent of his campaign PAC money from organized labor. Bill Orton supports Bill Clinton for president. Bill Orton supports the liberal Tom Foley as Speaker of the House. Foley is a man who supports The Freedom of Choice Act, a piece of legislation that would guarantee abortion on demand for all nine months of pregnancy. The problem is not Bill Orton's stance on these issues, the problem is that he puts the same slick gloss on the issue as Cousin Bill does. You can't tell the you are conservative and then vote That is dishonest. It is obvious that is pulling a Clinton in this campaign. There are two Bills that we don't Washington, Clinton and Orton. why I support George Bush and Harrington in this election.

Objectivity?

To the editor:

If The Daily Universe wants informed and satisfied reader should disavow any responsibility. Russell Fox's article on Bo Gritz appeared in the Monday Edition. I account of the rally makes those who actually attended it question who was even there.

The headline was inaccurate, for swore allegiance to Mr. Gritz; rather took an oath supporting the Constitution. The oath was simply the swearing for government employees and members of the armed forces — an oath longer required for government ment because it has been declared "stitutional." Mr. Gritz even President Benson's words (who w ing J. Reuben Clark), saying that political allegiance shall run not to uals ... (but) to our inspired Cons which God Himself set up.

Mr. Gritz did not compare his Captain Moroni; the person who opening prayer, however, did. M did not claim that the 16th Ame was "passed by conspiracy;" he that it was improperly ratified. M did not claim that his solution national debt would "... cause An default on the money it owes to creditors ... ;" he claimed the Reserve — a private corporation — default.

Mr. Gritz was not "... occas (stopping) his speech to point out he stopped his speech only once to sign, one that read "I-D-A-H-O." T did not scream "Liberty or death" one man shouted the phrase, and handful of people (of the thous attendance) "screamed" anything the speech.

Mr. Fox felt it ironic that Bo wote a U.N. flag seconds after threaten to anyone who would burn the U. Where is the irony? The U.S. is a sation, but the U.N. is not sovere ther is it a nation. Do you not agree citizen's first political loyalty shou their own democratic republic, an organization that represents ments instead of people, an orga that we as citizens have never had sentative voice in? Those are big important — differences.

James "Bo" Gritz's platform is: pro-family, pro-home education, "w instead of welfare, pro-Constitut Christianity, anti-New World Or return to stronger state's rights not a white supremacist. He does nate force as the first option to r conflict. He is anti-war. And he is the only presidential candidate that ports Ezra Taft Benson as a pro God.

While profiling political candidates, Fox should emphasize their plar qualifications and experience rather his own biases and exaggerated hy.

Waste not

To the editor:

I am appalled by the prevailing attitude about "wasting" or "throwing away" vote. This is the first election in re tory when this country has had major candidates. We should not waste opportunity. I have listened to me individuals refer to voting for B Bush as throw-away votes.

This attitude is appalling in any particularly in agencies holding a responsibility to the public.

Think about it. Are you going to vote by voting for the candidate likely to be placed in office by a Representatives that the people have control? Or will you use your votio lege wisely by voting your beliefs exerting the influence over our st representatives" that you should?

My vote will not be wasted. Will y

Penn State Not like Notre Dame

RAIG NELSON
Universe Sports Writer

Though Penn State may not be as tough as Notre Dame, the coaches and players are not looking the fact that Penn State's football program is definitely the same caliber.

Head coach LaVell Edwards of both teams have great athletes. "Penn State may be a bit better than Notre Dame on the offensive side of the ball, but the teams are much the same."

In a press conference taped for Penn State head coach Paterno said, "The trip to BYU is a tough trip. This is a typical college football team, they know how to throw the football. This year we have the best running backs in the nation at BYU."

Penn State has had problems with key player injuries similar to those of Notre Dame. Paterno said, "We have a very potent offense, we just have to step up and play quickly and stop the offense." Penn State has 85 touchdowns rushing and 73 first downs passing for the year.

Defensive lineman Mike Empey said, "It will be nice to play Penn State in front of our home crowd. We hope the crowd will recognize this is a big game against one of the big-name teams in college football. We hope our crowd will be as noisy and as loud as Penn State's fans were to us last year."

Empey said, "It doesn't mean we can't come and beat a team like Penn State. We just have to step up and play quickly and stop the offense." Penn State has 85 touchdowns rushing and 73 first downs passing for the year.

Women spikers trounce WSU; streak now 16

By JENNY SIDDOWAY
Universe Sports Writer

The 8th-ranked BYU women's volleyball team downed Weber State University in a sloppy three-game match Thursday night in Ogden. The victory upped BYU's winning streak to 16 straight matches and the team's record to 17-3.

The Cougars beat the Wildcats 15-8, 15-6, 17-15 despite being without Tea Nieminen (sore knee). Shannan Skidmore and Michele Fellows were the only starters to play the entire match.

BYU head volleyball coach Elaine Michaelis said, "It wasn't our best volleyball night. Carol (Rawson) played some of her best volleyball and Shannan (Skidmore) hit well. It was fun to get a lot of people in the third game. They hung in and won the match for us."

BYU has seven WAC matches remaining, as well as outings against Utah State and Texas.

LaRussa named best AL manager for '92

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Tony LaRussa, who led the Oakland Athletics to its fourth AL West title in five years, won his third American League Manager of the Year award on Tuesday.

LaRussa, who kept the team in contention during the first half of the year despite injuries to key players, received 25 of 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He got two second-place votes and one third for 132 points in the balloting, which is done on a 5-3-1 basis.

Phil Garner, who kept the Milwaukee Brewers in contention in the AL East until the final weekend of the season, was second with 76 points.

Baltimore's Johnny Oates finished third with 27 points. Cito Gaston, who led to Canada's first World Series title, was fourth with 13 points.

LaRussa, 48, won the initial AL manager's award from the writers in 1983 for leading the Chicago White Sox to the AL West title. He won it again in 1989 for leading the A's to the first of three straight AL pennants.

The A's moved into first place for good on Aug. 4 during an eight-game winning streak, then used a 10-game winning streak to extend the lead over Minnesota to 8 1/2 games by Sept. 18.

Rockies make Baylor 4th minority manager

Associated Press

DENVER — Don Baylor, long considered a top candidate to run a team but bypassed twice last year, became the fourth minority manager in the major leagues when he was hired Tuesday by the expansion Colorado Rockies.

"Now, we can set our own mark here in the Rockies," Baylor said.

"I am very pleased with the selection of Don Baylor as manager of the Colorado Rockies," said NL president Bill White. "I am gratified one of the National League expansion teams, through an extensive interview process, has chosen a man who has demonstrated strength, leadership, knowledge of the game and all the other qualities we talk about when we discuss hiring managers."

Baylor joins Cito Gaston of the Toronto Blue Jays, Hal McRae of the Kansas City Royals and Felipe Alou of the Montreal Expos on the list of minority managers.

Baylor, 42, played for six American League teams in a 19-year career, playing in three World Series and seven AL playoffs. He had a .260 career average, 338 homers and 1,276 RBIs and was hit by pitches a record 255 times.

Detmer, Shoemaker and BYU hoop

The 1992 BYU quarterback job has looked like the entrance to a good hotel — a revolving door.

Watching from the sideline, and inching slowly toward playing time, has been BYU's prized quarterback recruit, Paul Shoemaker. He's also been watching Koy Detmer, The One That Got Away, excel in a big backup role with No. 8 Colorado.

Shoemaker and Detmer went against conventional wisdom when they chose which school they would attend. Shoemaker, the star Colorado schoolboy last year, lived just 10 minutes from the Colorado campus. Detmer, the touted brother of BYU Heisman trophy winner Ty Detmer, broke Clements' Texas high school passing record. But Shoe chose BYU and Koy went to Colorado.

"I chose BYU mostly because it already has an established system of throwing the ball," Shoemaker said. "Colorado was just starting a passing system this year. Plus, I had two sisters in school here (one has graduated) and I liked the Mormon affiliation."

Early in the process, Shoemaker told interested schools that he would choose between BYU, Colorado and Washington. After visiting BYU, "I cancelled my other trips," he said.

Though a continuation of the injury problem could have his ended his planned redshirt season, that and a goal to leave on a Church mission in May 1993 are still intact. "The coaches don't want to use me now," Shoemaker said. "They were going to if they had to, but they don't want to now."

(John Walsh, who began the season as the starter at QB, traveled with the team to South Bend, taking snaps and throwing during the pre-game warm-ups. He will be available for Saturday's game with Penn State if Ryan Hancock and backup Tom Young are injured.)

For Detmer, who sounds a lot like his brother Ty, the decision was made for him. "I was thinking about BYU more in my junior year," he said, "but they took the Walsh kid and I got off them right away, because he would have been only one year ahead of me."

He chose CU based on their change of emphasis from the run to the pass and "the recreational aspect — hunting and fishing."

Unlike Shoemaker, Detmer has seen action this season, major action. And he's been successful. Early season relief appearances sparked Colorado to a couple of early season wins. When starter Kordell Stewart went down with an injury, Detmer stepped in and completed 33 of 50 passes for more than 400 yards in a start Oct. 17 against Big 8 foe Oklahoma. He led the Buffaloes on a last-minute drive that set up the game-tying field goal. Though the 24-24 tie preserved CU's 24-game conference unbeaten streak and its shot at a fourth consecutive Big 8 title, Detmer's five interceptions stung him.

"I felt bad because I made a lot of mistakes which if I hadn't, we would have won," Detmer said. "In this game, the negatives outweighed the positives."

Ty Detmer spoke to Koy Detmer afterwards. "I let him know I'd been there, too," Ty said. And he had. Ty's first game with BYU was a nightmare against Wyoming in 1988. Ty threw four interceptions while completing just 9 of 26 passes for 133 yards.

Provo City airport waiting on FAA expansion approval

PHILIP DEAN
Universe Staff Writer

The Federal Aviation Administration is expected to approve a proposal for the expansion of the Provo City airport within the next week, James Mathis, Provo's airport manager, said.

Mathis said the FAA requires an environmental assessment for any airport expansion.

"They want to make sure there are no lawsuits and that nobody is sued," he said.

The proposal is for runway 13, which runs east-west, to be extended 1,509 feet, which would make the runway 8,600 feet. The proposal also includes 500 feet of safety area at both ends of each runway.

Mathis said these extensions were recommended in a safety evaluation report and would bring the safety levels to federal standards.

"The safety areas are flat, paved areas that allow the plane to land short, or abort a flight without destroying the craft," Mathis said.

He said the airport currently has a moat and dike system at the end of the runways.

"A moat and dike system is about the worst thing to have," Mathis said.

Mathis said the FAA is looking at the proposal and is expected to decide the proposal has no significant impact on the environment.

"We have the consensus of every group involved and we expect the FAA to approve our proposal," Mathis said.

Mathis said the FAA provides 90 percent of the funds required for the project. Provo and the state will provide the other 10 percent.

Each year the airport will receive $1 million from the FAA and approximately $100,000 from the city and state until the project is complete.

"We're not sure how long it's going to take for the project to be completed, but we're expecting four or five years," Mathis said.

Flu season here; shots available

ERENE CHEN
Universe Staff Writer

Influenza is haunting BYU students this Halloween. Students are advised to seek flu vaccinations if they want to "minimize absenteeism" from work or school.

Dr. John Christenson, Primary Children Medical Center's Infection Control Program medical director.

Dr. Crankshaw, Utah Department of Health Immunization Department manager, said he doesn't regularly recommend flu shots for normal, healthy individuals who can tolerate being sick.

"It's a question of convenience," Crankshaw said. "If you're not in danger of a serious disease and can handle missing two to three days of work, a vaccination is unnecessary."

Flu shots are crucial for the elderly, health care workers or those with chronic respiratory illness, disease, cancer or diabetes, said Eileen Jenkins, Primary Children's Infection Control coordinator.

Jenkins said contracting the flu could become dangerous if a person has a weak immune system.

"In some cases, flu vaccinations prevent individuals from severe illness," Crankshaw said. "If you're a high-risk individual, make sure you receive a vaccination."

Crankshaw said flu shots are not a 100-percent effective guarantee against infection and can wear off after six months. He recommends receiving a vaccination between mid-October and mid-November, an ideal two weeks before flu season.

"Reactions to flu shots are mild side effects ranging from slight soreness to a small fever and achiness," he said. "You have to weigh the risk of getting the flu versus a mild reaction. But you should always talk to your physician first."

Crankshaw said pregnant women and people allergic to eggs face a risk of high fever from flu vaccination.

Students can receive flu shots at the County Health Department in Provo for $5.

LDS video debut a hit; 10,000 attend locally

By JULIE C. DAVIES
Universe Staff Writer

A special fireside featuring a newly released missionary video from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has received a positive response locally after its presentation Sunday, said BYU missionary Elder Hunsaker.

Hunsaker and his companion, Elder Williams, said the missionaries estimate more than 10,000 people attended the BYU presentations of "On the Way Home" and have received 30 teaching referrals as a result.

The film was broadcast over the Church satellite network Sunday evening to various locations throughout the United States. Firesides were organized locally at the ELWC Ballroom, the BYU 6th Stake Center and the married student stake center across from Cougar Stadium, Hunsaker said.

After the broadcast, non-members and their hosts were invited to stay for a special open house where the missionaries gave special presentations on the Book of Mormon, the Savior and the purpose of life, Hunsaker said. Nearly 200 people were in attendance.

The film presents a story about the conversion of a family in Virginia and the events and circumstances that lead to their baptism. It features flashbacks to their experiences with the death of a sister, teen sex and other personal challenges.

Lynn Packham of the LDS Missionary Department told the Salt Lake Tribune the new video will be used as a missionary tool to attract and teach nonmembers.

"The Missionary Department is very satisfied with the satellite broadcast and open houses that were organized," said Sherman Crump, managing director of the Missionary Department.

Frank Farwell, a junior majoring in communication studies from Kent, Wash., attended the Sunday night fireside and said he thought the movie was good and "had a lot of themes that could apply to different people."

Call's predicament is not new. Both Bauer and Linton listed mailing procedures as a reason students find themselves with bills they did not know they had. "Students can eliminate a lot of problems if they will forward their mail," Bauer said.

One problem with phone bills is "it isn't just a matter of splitting the bill up five ways like other bills," Linton said.

Sometimes freshmen are not aware of how much long distance calls cost and "have never had to budget their money before," Bauer said. They lose track of how much money they have spent and "end up with a lot bigger bill than they can afford." Then these students feel trapped and they simply do not pay their bills, he said.

Foreign students also easily find themselves with bills they cannot afford, Bauer said. "Their bills rack up a lot easier than other students'."

Yet, neither Bauer nor Linton think most students who end up with unpaid bills do it on purpose. "I don't think it's intentional. It happens somewhat innocently, but it is still a problem and students need to take the responsibility to take care of it," Linton said.

the roommate whose name the phone had been in before Call's. Eventually, her roommates received a late notice for the bill, and by the time she found out about it, the bill was already late. It then took her several weeks to find her roommates, tell them about the bill and then collect the money, although one roommate refused to pay her $80 portion of the bill.

'Change' takes front seat among '92 Utah candidates

By MATTHEW S. FRANCK
Universe Staff Writer

Behind the crossfire of negative campaigning and bickering, Utah's candidates for the U.S. House and Senate have at least one thing in common — they advocate change.

Certainly no other candidate has utilized the theme of change more frequently than Republican candidate for U.S. Senate Bob Bennett, whose billboards and posters often feature his name with the simple word "change" below it.

BYU political science professor Bud Scruggs said Bennett is typical of this year's crop of "outsiders." Bennett has a slight political background (Republican party work for Nixon), but is mainly a businessman. Bennett has been running on the promise that if he can't bring real change to Washington in his first term, he won't seek re-election.

Scruggs said while Bennett has been successful in his efforts to define himself as an agent of reform, he still must convince voters he, and not his opponent, Democratic nominee Wayne Owens, can affect those changes as a first-term Republican in a Democratic Senate.

Meanwhile, Owens' campaign has pushed the theme of reform by attempting to show that their candidate has already brought change in the House by fighting "in the defense of Utah," and that he will bring the same energy to the Senate.

Scruggs said Owens needs to convince voters that he has both the experience and the party affiliation needed to effect change.

"What Owens has to do is translate the fact that he is with the majority party, and therefore is better equipped to bring change," Scruggs said.

Like their senatorial counterparts, Utah's congressional candidates are just as ardent in attempting to define themselves as the emissary of change.

The race for the state's 2nd Congressional District has received national media attention, as it is one of only five run-offs in the whole nation featuring two women. Both Democrat Karen Shepherd and Republican Enid Greene are running on the premise of change.

In Utah's 3rd Congressional District, Republican challenger Richard Harrington has used a method similar to Bennett's, citing his lack of political experience as an asset rather than a fault. He said he welcomes not being a part of government where "elected officials have become subservient to the wishes of powerful special interest groups." His opponent, Democrat Bill Orton, said his method of bringing change is to continue with his "non-partisan approach to government," an approach he said was effective during his first term.

FROM WHERE WE SIT

Every year during BYUSA presidential and Student Advisory Council elections, students cry out for someone to address student concerns. I guess congratulations are in order. You got what you wanted; the BYUSA and its SAC is ready to address your concerns. Unfortunately, we have a slight problem. We don't know what your concerns are; we are trying to find out, though.

Where are all those people who begged the candidates to deal with the issues? Are you lost? I'm hoping you've just gotten involved with school and the million other things that college students do because it's difficult to find you.

Now, I realize that not everyone has the time or the inclination to be the student body president. But you ought to know what's going on around you, and, more often than not, you ought to have an opinion about it.

I'm challenging you to notice the environment you're in and to decide what you like and what you don't like. Basically, I'm challenging you to care. Right now. Today. Not next week. Not next February when elections are. NOW! I'm not here offering some cheesy "let me tell you what WE can do for YOU" line. I'm telling you what you can do for you. And now I'm asking you: do you care enough to do it?

The BYUSA Student Advisory Council represents your opinion to the administration. Have you told us what your opinion is? You can, you know.

It's not hard. Come talk to us. We keep office hours on the fourth floor of the ELWC every Monday through Friday from 3-5 p.m. If that's not convenient, call us at 378-3901.

Last August, a few of you said Maeser Hill was too dark. When you explained your concern, it became a personal concern for SAC representative Trevor Greene. He found that Dave Adams of the University Police was already looking into the issue, so he jumped in and helped with the research. In October, the SAC voted unanimous support for Dave Adam's final proposal. The lighting project will start in November.

We are trying to hear you. Some of you met with BYUSA officers at the lunch on the quad last week. We have also started a "class campaign" in which SAC representatives from BYUSA come into your classes to explain what SAC does. We leave issue flyers so you can tell us what you care about.

By the third week of November, we should have talked to about 17,000 of you through this campaign. The SAC is working to resolve many student issues. Maybe we'll address one of your personal concerns along the way. Maybe. But you can be sure we will if you let us know what your concerns are. It's not asking too much. All you have to do is care.
